

Desert Wildflowers

Superbloom? Well, maybe, but the desert is magnificent with or without all of the hype. In fact, I enjoy the more secluded spots on enticing dirt roads in the desert. We took this trip on March 1 - 3, 2016, driving to Lone Pine and then spending the next day in Death Valley. Badwater Road was lined with desert sunflowers (Geraea canescens) but little else. On the last day we drove around China Lake Ranch, Western Talc Road and Ibex Wilderness.

All of the pictures are geotagged. Unfortunately I haven't yet figured out how to show that info in a wordpress gallery. Nevertheless, you can see these images on Google photos with their locations: desert wildflowers, March 2016
